Two Major Expenses Make Marin Unaffordable for Our Workforce

What does it take for a family to make ends meet in Marin?

Let’s assume a family of four wants a two-bedroom unit. The fair market rent is just over $3,000 per month. If a family wants to limit their spending to 30% of their income, they need to earn $120,000 per year.

Unfortunately, many families in Marin don’t make $120,000—or even $100,000. And, according to the Insight Center for Community Economic Development, that’s what it takes for a family of four (with an infant and a preschooler) to be “self-sufficient” and make ends meet in Marin County.

In fact, just 65% of the population in this county meets the Self-Sufficiency Standard, meaning they can afford the basics for their family without public or private assistance. [Therefore, 35% is not self-sufficient.]

To make matters worse, child care in Marin is prohibitively expensive. The Marin Child Care Council reports that families can expect to spend $16,000 for licensed child care for a preschooler, and $20,000 for an infant.

For the family that happens to have both, they will be paying $36,000 per year for licensed child care—or more.

We have to ask, “How can working families afford to live in Marin County?”

UNAFFORDABLE CHILD CARE

In Marin County

Child Care is Not Just a Family Issue, It’s an Employer Issue

What’s the bottom line about child care? Working parents with high-quality, affordable child care are more likely to get to work on time, stay on the job and refrain from calling in sick. That makes child care important for employers as well as for families.

In Marin County, an estimated 55% of children with parents in the labor force do not have access to licensed child care. On average, 750 families are on the waiting list for subsidized licensed care; and with the cost of child care in Marin, many employees (and potential employees) simply cannot afford to go to work.

For those who do have access to licensed child care, the cost is exorbitant. According to the Marin Child Care Council, licensed care for a preschoole in Marin averages $16,000 per year, and $20,000 for an infant.
